Dear Hiring Team,

I'm a Senior Product & UX Designer with over five years of experience in B2B SaaS, fintech, sustainability compliance and industrial software. I'm usually brought into products that have grown messy or are going through a transformation, and my job is to make complex systems clear for the people who use them, while keeping the business realities in view.

At Gigapay, a fintech startup handling payouts between brands and creators, I was the sole designer. There was no Figma file and no product brand when I joined. I co-led the rebrand with the founders, built an accessible design system with our engineers, and redesigned KYC onboarding as the product expanded from Swedish to European payments. International payment volume grew fourfold and support tickets dropped by 30%. At Position Green, I led design for the Supplier Assessment product. I ran workshops with the product owner and customer specialists to turn a patchwork of features into a shared vision and a staged roadmap, and I built a user journey map from PostHog data, key-customer interviews and two years of stored feedback.

Today I work as a consultant at Nederman, which makes industrial air filtration systems. I design HMI interfaces and cloud monitoring dashboards, and I help product managers without a software background see their ideas, turning conversations with experts into prototypes built in Figma and Claude Code. Across these roles, my approach stays the same: talk to the people involved, look at the data, make ideas tangible early, and work closely with engineering so the result holds up in production.

My path into design wasn't a straight line, and I see that as a strength. I studied business and international trade in France, then worked in client-facing roles in London and Amsterdam before training as a designer. Running client calls and handling customer cases in French and English taught me to listen, to explain clearly and to understand what a business needs. Having lived and worked in France, the UK, the Netherlands and Sweden, I feel at home in international teams.

Outside work, I dance, run, draw and swim in cold water. These keep me curious and grounded, and I bring the same energy to the teams I work with. I would love to talk about how I could contribute to yours. Thank you for your time and consideration.

Kind regards,
Jeremie Roberrini
